PREFACE.

It is the firm belief of the author that if the words in the following lists are thoroughly committed to memory, a great obstacle toward the reading of Greek at sight will have been removed. These lists comprise practically all the classic Greek words in common use, excepting compounds, the meanings of which, upon close examination, so clearly reveal themselves that to include them would be superfluous. The author would urge upon the student the necessity of thoroughly analyzing compound words before consulting the lexicon. He will thus be surprised to find how often he can, unaided, ascertain their meanings.

While a large vocabulary is so essential, the author does not for a moment insist any the less upon a thorough drill in grammar.

The design is, that this book be used in connection with the regular daily work, and not as a text-book for separate recitations. Ten minutes or less every day will suffice.

The question may be asked, "Will the pupil remember the meanings of these words?" To this question there can be but one answer, — "Yes, if there be review, review, REVIEW." The teacher will find it well to have a vocabulary as part of the lesson for several consecutive days, say four, and to carry on, at the same time, what may be called a "back review." Thus, for example, the vocabularies on a particular day might be, No.'s XLVIII–LI, and in "back review," No.'s IX–XII. It will be found, after a while, that the vocabularies that have been most frequently reviewed will be so familiar to the student that a large number of them can make the "back review." The main point to emphasize is, that there must be constant review, and that with constant review the meanings will become so familiar that the student can say absolutely that they are his. A class using this book for two and a half years will master it.

Part I. contains one hundred and eighty-two words taken from the first three books of the Anabasis. No one of these words or a derivative of it occurs less than ten, and many of them or their derivatives occur more than fifty, times in these three books. If these words be learned by the student during the year of preliminary work, the substantial help that they will be to him in reading the Anabasis it is almost superfluous to dwell upon.

The experience of the author has shown him that Parts II. and III. can — always insisting upon the inevitable review — be thoroughly learned during the year and a half following the first year of elementary work.

As a practical illustration of the value of the words in these lists in reading Greek, the author would call attention to the fact that his class in Homer has, during this present semester, read six books of the Iliad, instead of three, the usual amount read in a semester, and has read them with ease and satisfaction, reading Books IV. through VI. at the rate of one hundred and fifty lines for a daily recitation.

My acknowledgments are due to Dr. E. C. Ferguson of U. S. Grant University, Chattanooga, Tenn., for valuable assistance obtained from his "An Aid to Greek at Sight."
